That’s what we see as we look back on the period of struggle and uncertainty the world faced over the past two years—and the collaboration and hope that has kept us going.

It’s the spirit that brings people together to take on challenges, recognize and address injustices, lift up those in need, and look for solutions to strengthen our community, for good.

Your generosity in 2021, supporting the people, places, and things that mean the most to you, is the perfect illustration of this.

There is still much work to be done. But through generosity and kindness, we look forward, together.
of course, that doesn’t mean there weren’t challenges—far from it. What this does mean is that we, together, persevered and committed to putting our giving spirit, our human spirit, in motion to help our community and those in it move forward through those challenges.

Forward. That’s our responsibility—to move and help others move forward. That’s what the stories you can read about in this Annual Report are about, people helping people move forward, through challenges to opportunities, from that which holds so many back from realizing their human potential to providing support to others to help them achieve those hard-earned hopes and dreams.

We join our colleagues on the Governing Committee and on staff in affirming to you the awesome responsibility we feel to do right by you, by our community, and by the track record established by those who came before us. We understand that it isn’t good enough to observe the rate of change in society today—it is incumbent upon us to seek understanding of that which is happening all around us, but also to see around the corners as to what’s next and where we can move forward, together, to meet each moment.

In the end, each of us answers in our own way whether we have done the best we could have done with the resources we have. The Columbus Foundation exists to help you have the most satisfying of answers to that question, in an individual and a collective pursuit of lives well lived. So, as we count the accomplishments of the year 2021 in this report, we want you to see that our success is your success, too, and couldn’t have happened without you—our donors, advisors, and the nonprofits delivering all they do in our community.

In 2021, The Columbus Foundation and its donors gave more than ever to support nonprofits in our community and beyond. These gifts continued to provide much-needed support as many nonprofits grappled with the ongoing effects of COVID-19. Your incredible generosity resulted in grants paid reaching a remarkable all-time high of $243.9 million to benefit 4,439 nonprofits and the individuals and families they serve. Since our founding, The Columbus Foundation has awarded $3.15 billion in grants to a wide range of causes, including social services, the arts, health, education, and more.

Your donations to create new funds and add to existing funds and foundations held at The Columbus Foundation, our Supporting Foundations, and our affiliate, Community Foundations, Inc. totaled $363.6 million in 2021, also a record in terms of gifts received during one year. By giving to causes you care about and engaging with others, you are helping us build a vibrant, flourishing region. This giving spirit demonstrates your ongoing commitment to creating a better tomorrow for all.
A record-breaking 224 new funds were established by individuals, families, nonprofit organizations, and businesses in 2021. As of December 31, 2021, the assets of The Columbus Foundation stood at $3.62 billion held in 3,169 charitable funds and 28 Supporting Foundations.

We thank the members of our extraordinary Governing Committee, who guide The Columbus Foundation with leadership and expertise. In 2021, we welcomed Marchelle E. Moore and Matthew A. Scantland to the Committee, and they were joined by Lisa Ingram in 2022. We offer our gratitude to Committee members Dwight E. Smith and Lisa A. Hinson, who completed their terms of service in 2020, and Joseph A. Chlapaty who completed his service in 2021.

The Columbus Foundation staff continues to grow to service the expanding needs of our donors and the community, and we are proud of the collective spirit and knowledge each brings as we partner with donors, professional advisors, and volunteers to strengthen central Ohio.

Yes, we live in a rapidly changing world with many concerns. But, strengthened by your connection to and support of us, we will help hold the center during these volatile times. And, we are resolved to find joy and celebrate joyously through it all as well.

As Louis Armstrong also sang—“What a Wonderful World” this is; and what a wonderful world it can be, if we keep moving forward, together, generously.

2021 HARRISON M. SAYRE AWARD

Tom and Nancy Lurie

The Harrison M. Sayre Award, given in honor of The Columbus Foundation’s founder and 25-year volunteer director, recognizes leadership in philanthropy in central Ohio.
Created in 1986, The Columbus Foundation Award recognizes organizations that have made a difference in the quality of life in our community.

The Spirit of Columbus Award was created in 2013 in honor of pilot Jerrie Mock, the first woman to fly solo around the world. The award recognizes those who exhibit bravery, determination, and boldness through their actions.

HOUGH SHE DIDN’T grow up playing sports like her husband, Lori Holtmann recognizes the impact kindness and teamwork can have on everyone—athletes, fans, and families alike. It’s something that was impressed on her early in life, and one of the things that has made her such a terrific “team mom” to the men’s basketball team at The Ohio State University for the past five seasons.

“A welcoming hospitality was one of the biggest ways that giving was demonstrated as I grew up,” Lori said. “It’s something that comes really naturally to me now, and I know that’s why—because that was modeled by my grandparents and my parents.”

Lori and her husband, Chris, met while both were working at Taylor University in central Indiana, she in student development and he as an assistant basketball coach.

“Early on, he told me his favorite Martin Luther King quote was ‘Life’s most persistent and urgent question is, ‘What are you doing for others?’” she said. “That’s always been a point of connection for us and we both share that conviction.”

A native of Gaithersburg, Maryland, Lori’s parents were both teachers, a path she thought she would also follow until halfway through college, when she switched to the student development side, getting her master’s degree in higher education. Chris was raised in Lexington, Kentucky, where his love of basketball grew right along with him. His talent took him first to Brescia College for two years, and then to Taylor University, where he played his final two seasons.

Chris’ coaching career, which kicked off at his alma mater in 1997, has taken the family, which includes the couple’s daughter, to Indiana, Ohio, and North Carolina, eventually leading him to Ohio State, where he has served as head men’s basketball coach since 2017.

Chris and Lori established the Chris and Lori Holtmann Foundation, a Donor Advised Fund at The Columbus Foundation, in 2018. Through their fund, the Holtmanns have helped numerous local nonprofit organizations including Mid-Ohio Food Collective, A Kid Again, Columbus Recreation and Parks Department, and other causes that are meaningful to them.

Recognizing the value of being part of a team and the importance of access to youth sports in our community, the couple partnered with Columbus Recreation and Parks to refurbish a basketball court at Feddersen Community Center on Columbus’ northeast side. Chris and Lori hope it is the first of many—Joan Park is next up and should be completed in the spring of 2023—and that it can be a way for young people, potentially the superstars of the future, to have safe places to play.

“Team sports provide so many opportunities for young people to learn and grow,” Chris said. “Because of this, partnering with Columbus Recreation and Parks to create as many safe and inviting basketball courts as quickly as possible is very exciting to me. Playing endless basketball games on courts just like these when I was growing up helped make me the person and coach I am today. So, it’s a great honor for us to work alongside our local communities in this way.”
Beshert is a word both Carol Fey and Joan Wurmbrand, MD, regularly use to characterize their life together. Fey described the Yiddish word as meaning ‘meant to be.’ “We think of many things about our life together as beshert,” she said.

Fey, a respected attorney specializing in family law and on matters unique to LGBTQ relationships, and Wurmbrand, a physician in private practice for 40 years, have built their lives around helping others.

The couple, together for 34 years and parents to three children, regularly give back to the communities they are passionate about. Together they make decisions about organizations to support, including their synagogue, the Columbus Jewish Federation, and local public radio stations WOSU and WCBE, and have been longtime supporters of the ACLU, Planned Parenthood, and the National Center for Lesbian Rights. In addition, both have given their time to various volunteer activities.

Wurmbrand served as Vice President of the Gay and Lesbian Medical Association, a national group, and has served on the board for many years. She also helped found a lesbian health foundation and, for almost 40 years, has been part of Women in Medicine, an organization dedicated to bringing together lesbian, sexual minority women, and gender expansive physicians, medical students, and their partners in a place that feels safe.

Fey has been an active volunteer in the Bexley school district, serving on the Bexley School Board, including two terms as President, and as PTO Chair for Cassingham Elementary. Fey also pioneered the establishment of shared custody for LGBTQ and other unmarried parents, laying the groundwork for the Ohio Supreme Court’s affirmation of that practice.

In 2021, the couple established the Fey-Wurmbrand Legacy Endowment Fund for Stonewall Operations, a Donor Advised Fund at The Columbus Foundation, in celebration of Fey’s retirement.

The couple intentionally decided to focus the fund on supporting the operating expenses at Stonewall Columbus, recognizing that this is often an area that needs help. Founded in 1981, Stonewall Columbus’ mission is to “increase visibility, inclusion, and connection for the LGBTQ+ community.”

The couple has a history of supporting the organization. Fey was a longtime board member and was awarded the Stoney Award in 1998 for her “groundbreaking legal work supporting LGBTQ families.”

The organization’s focus on connection and inclusion, and its importance to the central Ohio community, resonates with both women.

“I think of Stonewall as a necessary part of having Columbus be a vibrant community,” Fey said. “It’s one of the things that I’ve liked about Columbus, and that has kept us here.”

Wurmbrand agrees, noting the organization also provides much-needed support for the younger LGBTQ population. “Stonewall’s goal and mission to reach out to disenfranchised LGBTQ people is incredibly important,” she said. “We all learned decades ago that LGBTQ and trans youth commit suicide at incredibly higher numbers than straight kids do. That is a group that is near and dear to our heart, and we want to do what we can because they are one of our communities.”

“As a donor-advised fund, we have the opportunity to support different organizations related to LGBTQ needs across the state and nation,” Wurmbrand said. “Caroline and I have appreciated being able to support Stonewall Columbus through this fund.”

Although she grew up loving nature, Cleveland native Nancy Stranahan admits it was a self-described mid-life crisis in her early-40s that sparked her passionate dive into preservation after she and her then-husband took a trip to Central America and, for the first time, experienced true wilderness.

“We knew then that we didn’t want to lead uneventful lives,” Stranahan explained. “We wanted to make a difference and leave the world a bit better than we found it.” While they casually entertained the fantasy of buying a van and moving to Costa Rica, Stranahan knew that would be “checking out.” Instead, they started looking for opportunities to promote wildlands preservation in their home state of Ohio while continuing their work running Benevolence Café and Bakery in the North Market.

In 1995, the couple bought 40 acres and a cave after seeing a “for sale” sign while driving down Cave Road in Ross County. It turned out to be just the beginning.

Two years later, they formed the Highlands Nature Sanctuary nonprofit and began cultivating $100 donations to help purchase additional caves and lands for sale near their original purchase.

By 2004, the Highlands Nature Sanctuary had grown to a few thousand acres in size. “We had always presumed that the Sanctuary would remain our only land preservation project, but when I visited a prairie in Adams County that was for sale, one that boasted 43 state-endangered species, I knew we just had to expand our vision,” Stranahan said. “Kamama Prairie became our second preservation project, and that’s when the Arc of Appalachia Preserve System name was created to better describe the nonprofit’s growing footprint.”

Today, the Arc of Appalachia includes 24 preserves, 8,000 acres, and is still rapidly growing. It specializes in offering courses to the public in forest ecology, conservation, and stewardship, and provides opportunities for people of all ages to engage with nature through events and experiences.

In 2012, the Arc of Appalachia–Highlands Nature Sanctuary Endowment Fund was established at The Columbus Foundation to help ensure the long-term viability and success of the Arc of Appalachia.

ON THE MORNING OF January 31, 2016, Kim Miracle was awakened by a call at 4 a.m. that the Columbus Karma Thegsum Choling (KTC), a Buddhist temple where she served as volunteer director, was on fire.

She and her husband rushed down to see fire trucks surrounding the building engulfed in flames.

Firefighters quickly determined the fire was arson and started in a trash can in the alley beside the building on West Rich Street in Franklinton. While it wasn’t the young man’s intention to burn down the building, it was a total loss and a devastating blow to those who worshipped there.

Miracle reached out to the temple’s founder, Khenpo Karthar Rinpoche, explaining what had happened. Right away, he responded, “Don’t be sad—just focus on rebuilding.” She took his advice to heart, and made the decision to look forward.

For 45 years, Columbus KTC has been at the pinnacle of the Buddha’s teachings in central Ohio. Established in 1977, Columbus KTC began with a small but loyal following.

“We were established as one of the first centers of this type in the United States,” Miracle said.

Young couples and university students were the original congregants and met in people’s homes until 1982, when Columbus KTC moved to a loft at the corner of Dodridge and High Street. Every time the center moved, it got a little bigger. In 1990, Columbus KTC moved into the former church on the corner of West Rich and Grubb Street.

Immediately following the fire, other houses of worship throughout the city reached out to see how they could help. “Between all the people and the generosity across central Ohio who opened up spaces for us to hold our programs, we didn’t miss a single one,” Miracle said.

In 2016, the organization established the Columbus KTC Rebuilding Fund, an Organization Endowment Fund at The Columbus Foundation, to help collect donations as rebuilding efforts got underway.

“The support we felt was phenomenal; it was like we were being carried by everyone,” said Lama Kathy Wesley, Columbus KTC’s resident teacher.

As an entirely volunteer-led organization, they had to learn as they went. No one had experience in demolishing a building, extensive knowledge of fundraising, or how to build a new building. “We just kept talking to people,” Miracle said.

“We problem-solved that way.” After surveying members, Columbus KTC staff and volunteers worked with architects to design a larger, more flexible space on the same site, with dedicated office space, a large kitchen, and a community room. Although COVID-19 derailed some of its plans, the organization was thrilled to officially open its new facility in March 2022.

“Columbus KTC is a sanctuary of kindness in the heart of the city—a place where people can learn about mindfulness and how to cultivate kindness, tolerance, and compassion,” Miracle said. “We’re hoping to continue that mission and vision to be a resource for central Ohio.”

Lama Wesley agrees and hopes to interact more with their Franklinton neighbors in the future.

“I would love to see us branch out into the neighborhood and beyond to help serve underserved communities. I think meditation allows people to be with themselves in a different way and understand themselves in a different way. When we understand ourselves and know how we hurt, we can look at other people, how they’re hurting, and how to help them, too.”
The Maroon Arts Group (MAG) was created “to build and provide a platform for community, art, and learning, centered in the cultivation, celebration, and promotion of Black cultural production and art.”

MAG is a collective fueled by determination, collaboration, and the belief that art is a tool to connect us. Today, it features original programming that amplifies the voices of Black creatives in Columbus, showcases many genres of art, and is supported annually through The Columbus Foundation’s arts grantmaking. It was the actions of one local creative, Sheri Neale, that sparked the organization’s founding.

“I started it based on a feeling that I had about not doing enough as it related to the things that were happening in the Black community,” explained Neale. “I know what art does for me, so I wanted to translate that to my community in some way. There was a piece of work that I felt very strongly about; it was actually a play. I tried to give it to some places here that weren’t open to it.”

Believing the play, a theatrical collection directed by Troy Burton and playing in Baltimore, would be a catalyst for thought-provoking conversations in our community, Neale reached out to some local artist friends to see if they could raise enough money to bring the show to Columbus. Through open mics, reggae nights, and other fundraising efforts, they did—opening in 2015 to a sell-out audience.

During the process, Neale and others who had joined the effort, including local creative Marshall Shorts, realized the void that exists for ways to showcase Black artists in our community.

“After the play, the community said, ‘what’s next?’” Neale said. She and the other creatives continued to do the things that helped fund the initial project, embracing opportunities to allow creatives to share an open expression space. As they looked for new projects and ideas, she formalized MAG, becoming a 501(c)(3) in 2016.

Shorts had an idea to do something with shipping containers. “We were talking about space and what it would look like to do a small space, and that’s how the shipping container idea came to life,” Neale said.

It was low cost and could be seasonal, something MAG felt it could manage at the time. Working with the City of Columbus, MAG secured a vacant lot at the corner of Mt. Vernon Avenue and 17th Street, in the heart of the community. of the King-Lincoln Bronzeville neighborhood where many artists live and work. The Maroon Arts Group MPACC (Movement Pursuing Art, Commerce, and Community) Box Park opened in 2018. At just over 24,000 square feet, it features a performance stage attached to a shipping container and an art gallery space inside a repurposed shipping container.

“I think it’s a really welcoming space that has ‘a feeling’ that we get and that most people talk about it—even though it has no walls,” Neale said. “It was created with love and by community. The community had input. We definitely didn’t do anything without bringing the community there first. They blessed the land with nothing on it. It organically grew into what it is now.”

The park also offers creative wellness with yoga and fitness, a green space for gardening, and a growers’ market.

“I could not have imagined what that space has done. We are there to hone community artists and to remove barriers for engaging with art,” Neale said.

In 2021, MAG took on its most significant endeavor yet, entering into a purchase agreement to secure the York-Masons Building on Mt. Vernon Avenue. The building houses the historic Pythian Theatre and has been a staple in the Black community for more than 95 years.

When the building was listed for sale in 2020, the group, recognizing the history of the building and unsure what a potential buyer would use it for, collectively thought, “This can’t happen. This can’t leave the community.”

“This has been a cultural space for this community since 1926,” said Shorts. “It’s always been Black-owned and was built by Black masons. Since we’ve been here, it has been a part of the King Arts Complex, which again is a history of art and culture. At the time, people understood it to be the King Arts Complex, as we did. For us, it was like, man, we can’t not try to at least see what it would look like for us to collectively come together in the same spirit we did to bring the play.”

While no one had the personal assets to purchase the building, Shorts said there were serious conversations to figure out how MAG could play a role in keeping it a Black cultural arts space for the community.

“When you have people who are interested in it remaining a community asset, then you work it out. That’s what we were able to do,” Neale said.

In 2021, The Columbus Foundation awarded two grants totaling $80,000 to MAG to help support the restoration and repair of the theatre.

“Maroon Arts Group’s presence in the King-Lincoln district has revitalized the Mt. Vernon community by bringing arts to the people. I am excited by its growth and am looking forward to seeing how its programming connects communities, from traditional theatre settings to the innovative work done at the Box Park,” said Mark Lomax II, DMA, Director, Arts & Generational Grantmaking at The Columbus Foundation.

“The help from The Columbus Foundation allowed us to do boiler work and other things that we needed to do,” Neale said.

“Maroon Arts Group has become one of the most consistent arts organizations to focus on strengthening the community through culturally relevant arts and wellness programming.”

DR. MARK LOMAX II, DIRECTOR, ARTS & GENERATIONAL GRANTMAKING AT THE COLUMBUS FOUNDATION

“We have a lot of work to do. The Columbus Foundation was extremely generous and pivotal even through the process. To be able to have conversations and access to have those conversations changed the game for what we were able to do.”

The new building will greatly increase the programs and impact MAG can offer to the community.

“We get to take what we do and expand that into a larger space,” Shorts said. “Maroon Arts Group has always been an organic, collective experience. We are able to take the momentum that we have created with little resources and be able to expand that.”

Once repairs and renovations are complete, the group plans to rent the space out for community events and productions. They hope it will become a home for social justice, culture production, artist residencies, and more.

“We’re still thinking about all of the possibilities that can happen with a space with 27,000 square feet,” Shorts said. “We are re-imagining what an art space can look like in a community that has such rich history and building on the foundation that was already there.”
HEARTS, HANDS, AND MINDS IN ACTION

It was Brandy Jemczura’s two young children who initially inspired her idea to create Seeds of Caring back in 2016. As she thought about what she wanted her children to grow up and be like, she kept coming back to the same notion—the kind of people who, if they see something in their community they aren’t okay with, will do something.

What started as a few families joining together to put on a music program at a senior center has blossomed into a thriving and agile nonprofit organization focused on creating opportunities to educate, engage, and involve young people about how they, even as children, can make a difference in our community.

“Kids bring a certain joy, dedication, and energy to service and volunteering that is just unmatched. I think we have to harness that energy and grow that part of who kids are,” Jemczura said.

Even with a background in social work and education, Jemczura found it very difficult to find volunteer opportunities for kids in the central Ohio community. Seeing the response from the first effort with the senior center, she set out to create more of these types of opportunities for young people ages 2–12 and their families.

“I felt like we were missing a huge opportunity to shape future civic-minded leaders by helping an entire generation think about their community—and their role in it—in a different way,” Jemczura said.

News of the programs spread quickly, and by month three, Jemczura said they were flooded with families who wanted to be involved. That’s when she realized there was, in fact, a considerable need in the community for this type of connection, and she formalized Seeds of Caring, creating a 501(c)(3) in 2017.

To Jemczura, Seeds of Caring is more than just volunteering and helping out. It’s educating young people about pressing needs in the community and inspiring them to respond through service, social action, and community-building.

“We look at our impact in two ways,” she explained. “We want to make sure we’re meeting critical needs in our community and work with more than 40 nonprofit partners all across Columbus to do that. Once we know what those needs are, we build programming around it.”

Jemczura also believes that “empathetic reflection” is critical to kids growing from the experience. The model she and her team have created pairs educational components with action.

“We’ve built our curriculum around tough topics—everything from homelessness and racism to supporting LGBTQ youth. How do we start talking to kids about these things from a young age, so they grow up with a compassionate, empathetic lens on their community?”

The Columbus Foundation has awarded numerous grants to Seeds of Caring since its inception. In addition, the organization has received support from the Margaret and Robert Walter Foundation, a Supporting Foundation of The Columbus Foundation, for its work promoting and instilling kindness. As a way to engage students on World Kindness Day in 2021, The Columbus Foundation’s Center for HumanKindness awarded a grant to provide educators in 13 local school districts with a World Kindness Day Teacher Toolkit and funds students could help direct to nonprofits of their choice.

“Support from The Columbus Foundation and the Center for HumanKindness has been absolutely instrumental in our growth,” Jemczura said. “It elevated our mission, expanded our programs, and bolstered our partnerships across the community.

“We grew faster than we ever would have without that support. It also provided key dollars at a time when we were forced to significantly shift our program delivery."

Jemczura recognized early in the COVID-19 pandemic that the kids they serve were suddenly very disconnected from their community in a way that was harmful to their mental health. With The Columbus Foundation’s support, they were able to quickly provide meaningful ways to connect. Within two and a half weeks of the initial shutdown, Seeds of Caring released its first at-home project for groups and families. They had so many new families engaging that now, while it has brought back in-person opportunities, Seeds of Caring will continue to offer at-home opportunities because they are so supported.

“Seeds of Caring is bringing forward the next generation of philanthropists—educating about pressing needs through a lens of empathy and equity, all while activating hands and hearts,” said Dan Sharpe, Vice President for Community Research and Grants Management at The Columbus Foundation. “Leadership is passionate, strategic, thoughtful, and skilled—and the Seeds of Caring community is beyond generous and deeply engaged. The organization’s future is bright, and through their work, our collective future is, too.”

Through its journey, Seeds of Caring has experienced tremendous growth, from 285 child participants in 2016 to 14,507 in 2021. And Jemczura is excited about what’s to come.

“My hope for the future is that we continue to grow our impact here in central Ohio and beyond, building bridges across our community and collectively raising generations of caring, courageous, community-minded leaders. I think in doing this we will achieve our vision, which is a kinder, more connected world—led by our youngest generation.”

BRANDY JEMCZURA, FOUNDER AND EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, SEEDS OF CARING
The Charitable Pharmacy of Central Ohio opened in February 2010 under the direction of then-Executive Director/Pharmacist Allan Zaenger as a joint project of the West Ohio Conference of The United Methodist Church and what is now the Healthcare Collaborative of Greater Columbus. Its mission, then and now, is to increase access to prescription medications for low-income, uninsured, and underinsured Franklin County residents.

In 2021, The Columbus Foundation awarded a $50,000 grant to the Charitable Pharmacy of Central Ohio to provide operating support and the purchase of medication. “For folks who lack health insurance, or whose insurance does not meet their prescription needs, the Charitable Pharmacy is the difference between having and not having, between being able to take or not take, life-saving medications as prescribed,” said Emily Savors, Senior Director, Grantmaking at The Columbus Foundation. “And when qualifying for free prescription medication from the Charitable Pharmacy, customers also receive valuable health education from pharmacists. Central Ohio is fortunate to have this nonprofit operating locally.”

We sat down with R. Taylor Reed, PharmD, Executive Director of the Charitable Pharmacy of Central Ohio, to find out more about the growth and changes the organization has seen in recent years.

What’s the mission of the Charitable Pharmacy of Central Ohio?

Charitable Pharmacy’s mission is that all people in Franklin County have access to healthcare and affordable medication. Our vision is for all people to have the health resources they need to thrive; by pairing medicine with health education, counseling, and coaching, along with referrals to other nonprofit resources that bridge around the social determinants of health. The value is in keeping people out of the hospital by getting them healthy and helping them understand their medicines and disease states.

Our clients are taking an average of eight medications. The diseases we see most frequently—heart disease, high blood pressure, diabetes, and mental health issues—aren’t just a one-time thing. It’s not a co-pay once, it’s affording $10 times eight medicines monthly. This becomes an investment. Charitable Pharmacy helps bridge the gap so neighbors aren’t choosing between medicine or food, but can have both.

You are the only pharmacy in Franklin County that provides services at no charge and for up to a year. Why is that continuity important for those you serve?

Continuity of care is really important because the disease states we’re managing are chronic. It takes many months and a continual effort to help someone on their health journey. So, we’re partners with them for that duration. Patients qualify for a year at a time but can requalify. To qualify, you need to live in Franklin County and be at less than 200 percent of the poverty line by family size.

What types of medications do you provide, and to whom? Do you serve all ages? How does a client find out about you?

We are a full-service pharmacy that provides all types of non-narcotic medications. Nine out of 10 of the patients we see have high blood pressure. Sixty percent have diabetes and 40–50 percent suffer from a mental illness. A third of our patients need inhalers for airway disease. But all medicines are options for patients, and we work to streamline care so patients have the simplest regimen possible to reach their health goals.

The biggest referral source is from physicians. Too many people come to us after going into the hospital suffering a heart attack, for example. They are medically stabilized, and then as they step down they need to start a number of medicines and come to the realization that they aren’t going to be able to afford them.

Sadly, too many in Franklin County meet our qualification guidelines and no one should go without medicine for lack of ability to pay. My hope would be that all people know we exist so we can remove any stigma that comes with seeking help. The right to thrive should be one we all embrace.

What is the Medication Therapy Management model and how is it different than other charitable options in Ohio?

Medication Therapy Management (MTM) embraces the fullness of what a pharmacist is trained to do. Pharmacists do more than count medicines. They have a deep understanding of disease states and how medications work and are trained to educate, counsel, and coach patients on their health journey. MTM is just that, leaning into the health education that comes with medicine so the patients get to the goals they have around their health.

How did COVID-19 impact your ability to connect and provide services to your clients? How did your organization evolve to meet that ongoing challenge?

COVID-19 changed everything for everyone. If there’s a silver lining as we emerge from the global pandemic, it’s this—we know health is our greatest wealth; it’s interconnected for all of us, and without it the world is scary.

The pharmacy saw a huge surge in volume and need. We grew 40 percent almost overnight. We didn’t have to close our doors, but we had to change our model to meet the need and follow COVID-19 guidelines. We grew from filling about 70,000 prescriptions in 2019 to over 100,000 in 2020. We went from seeing patients in person to having to see them curbside and talk to them on the telephone. We had to navigate care in a different way. For patients who live at the margins and are vulnerable, that was even more challenging than it was for the broader community. That trend hasn’t receded, and we’re continuing to grow.

Going forward, we’re going to embrace the best practices we learned during COVID. That’s a hybrid model that meets people where they are.

In September 2021, you opened a second location in South Linden. Why did you choose that neighborhood to expand to, and how has it impacted your work?

We chose Linden because the data said this is where we’re needed most. Linden has some of the poorest health statistics, not just in this county, but in the state. We’ve learned that it takes hard work to build trust, undo historic past wrongs, and share an idea that some might feel is too good to be true. This idea is sincere around allowing people to feel seen and heard and valued. The power of that is something we’ve taken away as an incredible lesson of our work.

The opportunity in Linden presented not only to have the pharmacy, but a free produce market as well. We published the data that 66 percent of our patients were reporting food insecurity when asked by our social worker. By co-locating a pharmacy plus a market together, we have an opportunity to educate that ‘Food is Medicine’ and connect patients to nutritious food and the right eating options—that helps us at a holistic level get ahead of these chronic disease states. And that begins to set the stage where we can more fully realize this mission around health for all people.

"We serve nearly 2,000 people at any one point, but the table is bigger than that. We need more people to know we exist. We need to be able to reach all corners of Franklin County and embrace what this community is ready to hear—that health is our greatest wealth and that all people should have access to healthcare and medicine.”

R. TAYLOR REED, PHARMD, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, CHARITABLE PHARMACY OF CENTRAL OHIO
What does it mean to flourish? How do we measure individual and community well-being? And how can we better engage the community to solve some of our biggest challenges? To answer these questions, The Columbus Foundation launched its work around well-being focused on finding ways to help community members reach their full potential, live well, and experience a sense of meaning and purpose.

Since 2019, The Columbus Foundation has led design “sprints”—targeted efforts of one to eight weeks—to help identify and address problems facing central Ohio residents. These sprints have been a way to connect leaders of schools, government agencies, and nonprofit organizations with those who are experiencing the challenges firsthand, as a way to gain greater insight into their lived experiences and generate collaborative ideas to improve well-being.

To measure well-being, The Columbus Foundation built on a partnership with Harvard University’s Human Flourishing Program and CHRR at The Ohio State University. Through this work, and with additional collaborators including Stanford University’s d.school, Heather Tsavaris, Principal Consultant, Community Well-being: Design & Impact at The Columbus Foundation, has led a team of experts as they collaborate with community members known as “community designers,” using human-centered design as a tool to understand and solve community challenges. Community designers are those individuals most proximate to the problem, many of who are actually experiencing it. For example, for a project about providing support to young people who are experiencing homelessness, The Columbus Foundation partnered with young people who recently experienced homelessness.

Tsavaris developed and has been driving this work at The Columbus Foundation since the effort’s inception. She leads community well-being measurement and spearheads efforts to promote flourishing. Tsavaris has worked across sectors—including the federal government, the private sector, and the philanthropic sector—to develop and implement innovative and award-winning solutions to some of the world’s most difficult challenges.

What is human-centered design?
According to Stanford University’s d.school, a partner in our work on well-being, “Human-centered design is a process, mindset, and approach to identify meaningful challenges and creatively solve complex problems. It guides practitioners to understand and respond to the needs of specific people, question assumptions and reframe problems, and experiment to advance their solutions.”

Why is it an important tool when looking at challenges in a community?
Using human-centered design means going to our neighbors, learning from them, and understanding what challenges they are experiencing firsthand. When our neighbors’ experiences are centered in this way, we understand what is happening differently. When we equitably partner with them, we are able to co-create the solutions that would be most impactful.

What are some of the areas you’ve created design sprints around, and why were those selected?
Our projects have ranged from digital equity and youth well-being to emergency rental assistance and increasing belonging in places like museums throughout our community. We embark on projects in one of two ways: first, community partners come to us because they are interested in using this approach to better understand an issue or to build their own capacity to work in this way; or second, there is a significant community challenge that we think this approach could yield...
We started with three demonstration projects to see if we could co-design with members of our community to improve their well-being. We worked on improving belonging in Hilliard City Schools, improving belonging for young people at Central Community House, and improving belonging for people when they returned to Franklin County from Marion Correctional Institute. That early work proved that we could co-design with residents, we could understand problems they were experiencing more deeply, and we could co-create more innovative/relevant solutions.

In 2020, we began doing this work virtually and were able to recruit top equity designers from around the country to join us. They were really interested in what we were trying in Columbus and in our commitment to equity and our residents. Since 2020, we have refined our practice. Importantly, we have continuously asked our co-designers—our community designers—to help us make our approach better and more equitable. We also now spend more time working with nonprofits and community partners before bringing in community designers, training them on the art of co-design and equitably partnering with residents. We continuously apply design principles to our own work, iterating as we do each project and continue to build our team.

How has this work evolved?

How do you think The Columbus Foundation’s efforts in this area will help move the community forward?

Seeing The Columbus Foundation embrace this approach of partnering deeply and equitably with our neighbors and nonprofits to get to a different understanding and innovative solutions has been inspiring and immensely rewarding. When an organization like The Columbus Foundation says to a young person who has experienced homelessness, “We need your help to solve a hard problem in our community,” it hopefully changes the game. Our community, like so many, has hard challenges. As we think about the future, it seems to me that the way to get to equitable well-being for all of us is to work deeply together.

How is this work being measured?

We are using a variety of methods to measure the impact of our work. These include qualitative and quantitative data collection, systematic observation, and feedback from our employees, clients, and partners.

What is one thing that has surprised you so far?

The power in asking someone to participate; the magic that happens when you invite someone who is typically NEVER asked their opinion to not only weigh in, but also to help co-create solutions that will really work; and finally, this axiom that we hear every time we do a project, no matter the topic—people don’t always want to be helped, they want to be helpers, too.

Everyone has experiences, gifts, or ways that they can contribute to help solve problems for other people. People need to be asked to contribute and be respected deeply when they do. Maybe the surprising part is how easy it is to ask respectfully and listen—and the immense impact it can make on all of us when we do.

SUPPORTING FOUNDATIONS

FROM A FAMILY BRINGING multiple generations together to make a difference in the community, to a corporation enhancing employees’ engagement with the causes they care about, each Supporting Foundation has an individual and inspiring story—and each has unique philanthropic goals.

While Supporting Foundation donors and boards focus on these goals and on the big picture of their philanthropy, The Columbus Foundation’s expert staff takes care of the details—offering a wide range of professional services, from identifying critical community needs for grant investments, to developing financial policies and strategies, to assisting as founders frame their guidance for future foundation boards. The philanthropic family office approach benefits current generations and those yet to come, as Supporting Foundations are designed to continue in perpetuity.

Compounded over time, Supporting Foundation investments in the community present a compelling story of the impact of philanthropy. Since the first Supporting Foundation was created in 1976, Supporting Foundations have collectively paid over $881 million to advance the programs and causes most important to them, in central Ohio and across the nation.

A second year of the COVID-19 pandemic could not dampen the generosity of those in our community, as we experienced one of the most robust years in Columbus Foundation history. A total of $363.6 million in gifts and contributions flowed into The Columbus Foundation and our Supporting Foundations in 2021, by far the most ever in a given year.

As a result, grants and distributions from donor funds into the nonprofit community also were at an all-time high—$243.9 million for the year.

The Columbus Foundation and our Supporting Foundations once again benefited from positive investment returns in 2021. Broad equity markets experienced double-digit growth, and our primary endowment portfolio was also a beneficiary, returning +13.0 percent for the year.

The generosity of our donors along with another year of positive investment returns allowed our total overall donor assets to close the year at a record $3.6 billion. As a point of reference, in 2011 our total assets were $1.2 billion, showing more than a 200 percent increase over the past 10 years.

We are excited to be able to utilize some of this growth as a way to expand our investments in our community, with one such avenue being the launch of the Equitable Small Business Fund in 2022, which will focus on investing in minority-owned companies. We look forward to reporting on this progress in next year’s Annual Report.

Thank you for your continued partnership.
In 2021, the Foundation and its related entities received more than $363.6 million in new donations and bequests. Since 1944, generous donors have made gifts totaling more than $4 billion!
Grants Distributed to the Community

Grants awarded in 2021 went to 4,439 nonprofit organizations. Since the first grantmaking year in 1944, The Columbus Foundation has distributed more than $3.15 billion in grants. While the majority of the Foundation’s overall grantmaking continues to be distributed to central Ohio nonprofits, the Foundation also distributes grants to organizations throughout the state of Ohio, across the country, and internationally.
Assets

Combined assets of The Columbus Foundation and its related entities ended 2021 with a total market value of $3.62 billion. The Foundation continues to be one of the nation’s largest community foundations, with more than half of its growth occurring over the past decade.

Continued growth in Donor Advised Funds and Supporting Foundations is an indication of donors’ desire to give back to our community. This growth is also an indication of the dedicated stewardship of the Foundation’s Governing Committee, staff, and its many committee volunteers.

This is a tremendous moment of opportunity for our community. As we collectively emerge from a devastating pandemic, our region is poised for unprecedented growth. Through all the changes, the challenges, the triumphs, and the unexpected, we remain inspired by, and grateful for, your continued generosity. Together, we are strengthening and improving our community for all.

As your community foundation, one that was birthed in the midst of World War II and now ranks as one of the largest in the United States, The Columbus Foundation stands ready to help you make a difference in the lives of others.

THANK YOU FOR BEING THE FUEL THAT TRULY HELPS PROPEL US—AND OUR COMMUNITY—FORWARD.
OUR MISSION

To assist donors and others in strengthening and improving our community for the benefit of all its residents.

OUR PROMISE

To help you help others through the most effective philanthropy possible.
